Tyler Burke is the Director of the Research and Analysis Group at Selendy Gay. Tyler leads a team comprised of analysts with broad expertise in economics, finance and capital markets – a unique capability among law firms.

The Firm's analysts focus on technical and quantitative aspects of cases, adding value for clients by mitigating the need to engage outside experts on complex financial matters. Tyler and the analyst team also research and develop potential cases, seeking to monitor developments and spot opportunities on which the Firm may be engaged.

Before joining the Firm, Tyler worked in research roles for the structured finance, leveraged finance and capital markets groups in the New York office of a global law firm. Prior to his law firm career, Tyler was an associate at a capital markets consulting firm that is now an arm of global data and analytics firm IHS Markit. Tyler completed Columbia University's post-baccalaureate business program and holds a BS in Public Affairs Management from Indiana University.
